Elon Musk's human-computer-interface company, Neuralink, seems to be off to a strong start.

"We've already got a monkey with a wireless implant in their skull, and the tiny wires, who can play video games using his mind," Musk said in an interview on the "Good Time Show" on the app Clubhouse on Sunday night.

"One of the things we're trying to figure out is can we have the monkeys play mind 'Pong' with each other," he said. "That would be pretty cool."

But Musk said the video-game-playing monkey got a wireless chip that enabled it to control an electronic interface with its mind only.

"He's not uncomfortable, and he doesn't look weird," Musk said. "And you can't even see where the neural implant went in."

The wireless bit is particularly important, as it could eliminate the potential for infection that comes with wires protruding from organic material.

"If you can do experiments with something that doesn't involve wires coming through the skin, that's going to improve the welfare of animals," Andrew Jackson, a neuroscience professor at the University of Newcastle, told Insider last year.
